

Vignette: University Students 2

She flips the white board on its axis to write down the theme of their group's presentation. It is covered in writing from a previous lecture. She tries to wipe the letters from the whiteboard, but it stays. "Mit wasser! Mit wasser!", says the others as they briefly join her to also try to get it off. Nothing works. The rest of the group decide to start with the presentation and they leave her to it. She tries another cloth. She wipes more forcefully now. Up, down, up, down. Left, right, left right. She stands on tippy toes in her black sneakers with the bright laces. Wiping. She takes her water bottle and wets the cloth. Wipe wipe. Nothing. The others are showing video clips and powerpoints of Bloom's Taxonomy and Webb's depth of knowledge. She sighs. Flips the whiteboard over again to the text from the previous group. She marks off a space where she can write. Today the technology works perfectly. But the white board. The white board is not working well.
