

Vignette: University Students 3

She has long red hair. Braided on two sides. Short black denim mini-skirt. She sits right at the back of the class perusing the screen of her Apple laptop. Today they have to present their group assignments. She does not look up as the other groups present. When it is time for her group to present, she takes her laptop and goes to the front. The group shows a video on summative assessment. She is standing, leaning against the table. Fiddling. Fiddling with a red pen. Fiddling with her nails. There is a small band-aid on her one hand. Her part of the presentation uses a kahoot. It focuses on Mathematics. She spots a mistake in an early question and, bowing over, starts to delete some of the questions in the kahoot. Frowning. As she is deleting questions, she explains to the lecturer that the early faulty question affected the following questions. "This is not a Maths lesson", says the lecturer. She looks up. Everyone is intrigued with the kahoot. She stands upright. "This is really easy to use", she says. Now she explains the technicalities of how to set up a kahoot. Speaking really fast. Flawless. When she is done, she goes back to her spot right at the back of the class. Laptop open, sitting and reading the screen, as the lecture continues. In the background.
