They are blushing as they speak to one another. He leans over. Tells a joke. They both laugh, just the two of them. All around them their fellow students are pairing off for the group activity. She is dressed in black winter clothes. She walks around from pair to pair amongst her fellow students, interested in what they are doing, taking time to explain where needed. Moving back to him every now and then. Standing close. He is sitting on a table. The paired discussions are in German. She touches her lips. Standing with one hand on her side. She says something in German and the entire class gets up and moves to their original seats. The lecturer starts to explain the requirements for their portfolio assignment at the end of the semester. She sits next to him. "Does our teaching have to be completely finished? With the school stamp?" asks the other students. "So we have to give each other marks?" she asks.
